Supply chains & risk of modern slavery

Oncore has reviewed its modern slavery practices risks across our operations and supply chains considering the following: sector and industry risks, product and services risks, geographic risks and entity risks.

As a result, Oncore has been able to identify areas of no or low risk, for example operational activities that are directly undertaken by Oncore employees. We have identified potential risk, for example where a local third party supplier may source a technology product from overseas sources. We will use these potential risk scenarios to prioritise our supplier engagement activities in the future. We are also working on refining the traceability of goods and services within our supply chain.

Assessing & addressing modern slavery risks

Oncore has taken the following action to assess, identify, and address these risks including:

- Preliminary mapping of our supply chain broadly to assess risk.
- Publishing this Modern Slavery Statement.
- Creating and implementing a Modern Slavery Policy and a supplier Code of Conduct.
- Reviewing project and contract management systems to address modern slavery, including templates and other documents.
- Allocating responsibility for assessing and addressing modern slavery risks to the Legal team, who will brief our Board.
- Convening key departments within Oncore to assist with the assessment and response to key risks.

- Developing a specific five-year action plan in relation to addressing Modern Slavery Laws.

Assessing the effectiveness of these actions

We monitor, manage, and report progress on a range of indicators used to assess the effectiveness of our responsible business programs and performance. We have established a process to review our actions, which includes updating our policies annually and implementing risk assessment processes to ensure they remain up to date. We have conducted an internal audit to assess and address modern slavery risks, including mapping key parts of operations and supply chains. We have updated our policies and procedures and amended our contract wording to reflect Modern Slavery laws.
